I suggest you read again the N. The book is nicely constructed as a series of letters and even if it predictably indulges a bit too much at least for me in neuro-science data, it does well its job and should be a suggestion. This is an important book to be read today because it stresses the importance of reading in forming a "well-shaped" person able to walk into the world with civic sense, compassion, empathy and critical abilities, exactly what we're currently about to lose because of the speed and superficiality of the new medias.
